Once again, Adam Schiff flat out REFUSES to let duly elected Members of Congress ask questions to the witness, simply because we are Republicans. His behavior is unacceptable and he continues to abuse his Chairmanship. Watch  pic.twitter.com/qm9Uj8tiHO

George Conway @gtconway3d

Nonsense. You went to Harvard. You can read. You knew full well that the operative resolution (H.Res. 660) only allowed questioning by the ranking Republican or Republican counsel at that point, and that you'd get your turn later. You pulled a stunt to gaslight the public. twitter.com/EliseStefanik/

As seen on video, Stefanik tried to ask former U.S. ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch questions, but Schiff cut her off.

“The gentlewoman will suspend,” he said, gaveling. “You’re not recognized.”

Stefanik said this was the fifth time Schiff interrupted “duly elected members of Congress.”

Ranking member Rep. Devin Nunes (R-California, 22nd District) took Stefanik’s side, saying Republicans controlled the time, and that they can yield it to whomever they wished. Stefanik suggested online that she wasn’t allowed to speak because she was a Republican. Conway directly addressed and debunked the claim.

“Nonsense,” he said. “You went to Harvard. You can read.”

As Law&Crime pointed out before, the impeachment inquiry doesn’t follow the normal set of rules.

“Only the chair and ranking minority member, or [an Intelligence Committee] employee if yielded to by the chair or ranking minority member, may question witnesses during such periods of questioning,” stated House Resolution 660.

That means the following: Chairman Schiff could make his opening statement and question the witness, then yield to House Democrats’ counsel Daniel Goldman for questioning; Ranking Member Nunes could make his opening statement and question the witness, then committee shall proceed with questioning under the five-minute rule pursuant to clause 2(j)(2)(A) of rule XI," HR 660 says.
